However, such chemical compounds typically suffer from various deficiencies, such as poor pharmacological profiles, poor bioavailability, undesirable toxicity, poor stability, or other undesirable pharmacokinetic or pharmacodynamic properties. In order to overcome one or more of these deficiencies and to achieve better therapeutic outcomes, it would be desirable to administer pharmaceutical compositions that contain the chemical compounds in a different formulation. For example, it would be desirable to provide pharmaceutical compositions containing a chemical compound that are more readily absorbable and have a longer lasting effect when orally ingested. The present invention provides compositions containing a chemical compound and an absorption enhancer. These compositions are suitable for delivery of a wide variety of compounds, including chemical compounds that have potential value as pharmaceuticals.Eco-protective approaches of human activities: energy in South Asia and Sub-Saharan Africa. A regional concept is proposed for the association of human activities related to energy. Energy is the backbone of economic and social development. It is the driving force for the transition from a predominantly rural to a predominantly urban society. The analysis of energy technologies in which humans depend on suggests that humans are in a symbiotic relationship with other species, which in turn depend on humans. The concept of sustainable development is based on this relationship, placing humans into the ecological niche. Eco-protective methods are also discussed in this paper. These methods concern protection of humans and other species from the effects of negative impacts of human activities. The human/nature relationship is also viewed in the context of information about energy from the perspective of the oral tradition in South Asia and Sub-Saharan Africa. Energy, as a major resource, will continue to be an important component in an increasingly globalized world, where we are looking forward to a level of human influence on nature, such that we are part of a larger network of life. The alternative will be to prepare for a more frequent human-generated disaster, for example, due to a sudden shift in global average temperature and resulting cooling of the earth's surface. The more we come to rely on our energy sources the greater the necessity to incorporate into our approach with respect
